S. & P. TURNPIKE

In the trip around Pocahontas county to places of historical interest by the Kiwanis Club, the chapter last Friday night was the Staunton and Parkersburg Turnpike. It was touched in places by Calvin W. Price.

Staunton & Parkersburg Turnpike is the northern entrance to Pocahontas County. Now State Road No. 56. It was a great thoroughfare in the days of the stage coach, from the Western states to Washington, and from the northwestern counties to Richmond. Constructed under surveys made by Claude Crozet, one of Napoleon Bonaparte's engineers.

The Cheat river country is high above the Greenbrier river. Flora that of the Canadian fir woods; thornless blackberry, balsam, spruce and larch, varieties of fern. Civil War camp of General McClelland's Union army, 1862. Fortifications plainly visible. The Narrows between Durbin and the Tannery, was a favorite runaway for deer. Henry Clay maintained a hunting camp in the Narrows.

October 3, 1861, was the date of the Battle of Greenbrier River. The Union Army brought its artillery down off Cheat mountain during the night, and bombarded the Confederates in Camp Bartow all day and then took their cannon back to the mountain next night. Greatest amount of powder expended in any battle fought in West Virginia, but without gain to either side.

Confederate Camp Bartow held the bridge across Greenbrier River, 1861. Fortifications still to be seen. Travelers Rest was an ancient tavern on the site of B. B. Beard's residence. Famous stage coach stop here. Mentioned in the writings of Portie Grayson, Ambrose Pierce, Joseph Hergetzheimer and others.

At Travelers Rest the Staunton and Parkersburg Pike begins the ascent of the Allegheny mountain, the longest mountain of the Appalachian Range, from Labrador to Alabama. The Pike is the present southern boundary of the Monongahela National Forest. The Federal Government has acquired several hundred thousand acres in West Virginia and is being added to year by year. Primarily for forestry and water supply, it is destined to be the most beautiful forest in the eastern part of the United States. This forest is being developed with roads, camp and camp sites, and the public is welcome to use it for recreation purposes.

The Battle of All Gheny was fought on December 13, 1861. Battle site on the Staunton & Parkersburg Pike at the western brow of the mountain. See fortifications near school house and church. Union army under General Milroy attacked winter camp of General William L. Jackson. Victory for Confederates. Fighting particularly deadly around the old log church.

Claude Crozet was one of Napoleon's engineers, and that means he was one of great ability. He was taken from the college of engineering at West Point to be at the head of the ambitious public improvement program of the State of Virginia. This developing program had to do with the building of highways and canals, which would have made Virginia the gateway—the front door—of the fast growing west. Except for the breaking up business of war between the states and the coming of the railroads, these developments would have brought the metropolis of the country to Hampton Roads instead of at the mouth of the Hudson. The Staunton & Parkersburg Turnpike was an important link in the chain of development, as a main thoroughfare between the West and the East.

An engineer in charge of the present Federal road work in this region told me that in his work he often had occasion to consult the field notes of Claude Crozet. These notes are marvelously complete. They are correct to the minutest detail, and the location of his roads cannot be improved upon. The long swinging curves of the pike are the delight of the engineering profession.

On the old Northwestern pike where it crosses Cheat River, Crozet made a notation that for so large a structure a bridge architect should be consulted. However if it were not convenient to secure the services of such an engineer, the following plans and specifications will prove satisfactory. Then followed a list of

Got Up In The Morning Feeling DIZZY

"I began to suffer with headache and biliousness," says Mr. John C. Malone, of Buena Vista, Ohio. "I had a hurting through the middle part of my body which seemed to come from indigestion. I would get constipated, and then feel all out of sorts. I would get up in the morning feeling dizzy, and everything I ate would disagree with me."

"Someone asked me why I did not try Black-Draught. I found it to be just the medicine I needed. When I feel a spell coming on, I begin by taking a dose of Black-Draught, dry, at night. I continue to take it for several days, and in a short while I am feeling fine. It is all the medicine I need."

every piece of material needed in the construction of bridge, the size of the timbers and the dimensions they should be cut to. The engineer told me that as a matter of curiosity, he had measured some of the timbers and each corresponded exactly with the specifications in Crozet's field notes. The wonder to that modern engineers was that Crozet could sit beside a stream away from his office and equipment and offhand reel off a set of plans and specifications which would go into a structure without an error like the material into King Solomon's temple. After almost one hundred years the old bridge is still serviceable.

One of the master road builders under Crozet was Conrad Kramer, late of Frankford-on-the-Rhine. His children to the third and fourth generation are road-builders, and each season still sees some of them at work on the old Pike. In the Kramer family is a sextant which Crozet gave his old road builder as a token his esteem.

This is the week that the sassafras is in bloom. I never before noticed the saffron hued flowers in such profusion. These flowers are not the distinctive features of the early spring landscape as are the white of the service tree, the red of the soft maple or the light ivory of the sugar trees, but they are a satisfying trimming of the fence row and roadside, nevertheless. The books say that the fruit of the sassafras is fleshy I had never noticed, but I will look it up this season. Sassafras tea is a satisfying brew. It is pleasant to the taste, and a fine spring tonic. It thins the blood and cast out the humor. It is best when made with maple sap. Get the "red" variety, and avoid the kind with the "blue" roots. I had my course of sassafras tea some weeks ago, and since then the world has been a brighter and a happier place in which to live.

The books also say that sassafras is given as a stimulant, and used in chronic cases of rheumatism and skin diseases. It is sold in branches, in pieces or in chips. The bark is more powerful than the wood. In the early days of the Virginia colony, as Virginia sassafras wood, sassafras was a considerable item of commerce with the mother country. Its use, as a tea was wide spread in the British Islands. Then Great Britain took India, and store tea took its place as the national drink. I have always had the fool idea that if it had not been to hand of the merchants of London to develop trade with the populous Indian possessions that sassafras tea would be the tea of commerce instead of tea leaves from the east. The dried leaves are very mucilaginous, and are sometimes used for thickening soup. Somehow or other I always think of the sassafras as a shrub, or a small tree at best, but there is a sassafras tree on Porter Kellison's place on Swago, that is fully three feet across the stump and would make three good saw logs.

How excellent thy kindness, O my God.

Though I must now endure the chastening rod,
I have friends around me
Since rheumatism downed me
Who have in kindness drowned me
Like a flood.

There is not any kindness but of God
Though it abounds at home and far abroad;
And let me frankly pen
God sends relief by men
Wherever whenever He can
On the sod.

How excellent thy kindness, O my God
When every stay is vanished like a cloud—
Then thou art very near
To comfort and to cheer,
To dispel every fear
From the bowed.

Then when you feel forsaken, reader dear,
Look all around and you will find
I charge.

The kindness of the Father
Will be seen in some other
God sister or brother
Never fear.

DIED

Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Callison died at her home near Beard, April 12, 1929. The cause of her death was infirmities of old age. She was seventy-four years, seven months and thirteen days old. On Saturday afternoon, April 13th her body was laid to rest in the old Drop cemetery, the service being conducted by Rev. J. W. Pugh.

She was the daughter of the late Mr. Elisha and Mrs. Sallie Callison. Of the family there remain six children—Samuel O. Callison of Renick; Mike, W. H., and Dewitt Callison of Beard; Charles E. Callison of Rainelle; Mrs. Efford Jacobs, of Raceland, Kentucky; Mrs. Ella M. Williams, of Willow Branch, W. Va. Her husband and two daughters preceded her to the grave some years ago. She is survived by four brothers and one sister, 26 grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren.

She was a member of the Presbyterian church for a number of years. She was a good christian woman, a good neighbor and was loved by all who knew her. She leaves to mourn their loss a host of relatives and friends.

CARLYLE ON WAR

What, speaking in quite unofficial language, is the net-put and upshot of war? To my knowledge, for example, there dwell and toll, in the British village of Dunderidge, usually some five hundred souls. From these by certain "Natural Enemies" of the French, there are successively selected, during the French war, say thirty able-bodied men; Dunderidge, at her own expense, has suckled and nursed them; she has not without difficulty and sorrow, fed them up to manhood and even trained them to crafts, so that one can weave, another build, another hammer, and the weakest can stand under thirty-pound ax-axes. Nevertheless, amid much weeping and swearing they are selected; all dressed in red and shipped away at the public charges, some to thousand miles, or say only to the south of Spain, and fed there till wanted. And now to that same spot in the south of Spain are thirty similar French artisans, from a French Dunderidge, in like manner wending; till at length, after infinite effort the two parties come into actual juxtaposition; and Thirty stand fronting Thirty, each with a gun in his hand. Straightway the word "Fire," is given, and they blow the souls out of one another; and in place of sixty brisk and useful craftsmen, the world has sixty dead carcasses, which it must bury, and shed new tears for. Had these men any quarrel? Busy as the Devil is, not the smallest? They lived far enough apart; were the enemies of strangers; nay in so wide a universe there was even, unconsciously, by Commerce, some mutual helpfulness between them. How then? Simpleton! Their Governors had fallen out; and instead of shooting one another, had the cunning to make these poor block-heads shoot.
